Project Description

The Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation is looking for a social media-savvy undergraduate to scour a variety of outreach platforms to monitor the discussion on the issues we deal with every day--the Iran nuclear deal, North Korea's continued saber-rattling, chemical weapons in Syria, to name just a few. Twitter and Facebook are our two primary platforms, but there may be other opportunities as well. And if you've got a knack for creativity and design, we'd love for you to create some social media content for us to share: infographics, photographs, illustrations--the world is your oyster. While social media and graphics experience are key for this position, it's a huge plus if you're studying nonproliferation and know something about nuclear, chemical or biological weapons as well. Just not how to use or proliferate them. Because if that's you, then we won't work with you. We will work against you. Forever.
